

Zhuoli Zhang PhD

Department of Rheumatology and Clinical Immunology in Peking University First Hospital Chinese Mainland

Prof. Dr. Zhuoli Zhang qualified with doctor degree of medicine from the School of Medicine, Peking University in 1991. After junior posts in general medicine in Peking Union Medical College Hospital, she spent 4 years and finally received her PhD in 1999. She practiced as a rheumatologist in Peking Union Medical College Hospital for 17 years. She ever worked as a clinical research fellow in Imperial College, London and as a registered rheumatologist in the Netherlands for four years. Her major research interests include the pathogenesis, diagnosis and treatment of rheumatic diseases, as well as application of ultrasound in rheumatology. Prof. Zhang has started to promote and organize the nationwide musculoskeletal ultrasound course since 2010. By the end of 2016, 21 courses have been completed and nearly a thousand Chinese rheumatologists have received the training. In 2013, Prof. Zhang edited and published the first book about musculoskeletal ultrasound in China <Standard scanning and application of musculoskeletal ultrasound in rheumatology>. She is also the author of over two hundred scientific publications. She is currently working as the director of department of Rheumatology and Clinical Immunology in Peking University First Hospital, which also involves research as well as teaching of medical students.